For the Mercury. FORWARD LET THE PEOPLE GO.

BY BLURN MURRAY.

Speak unto the people, saying In the name of God Most High, In the name of Israel's monarch, Ruler of the earth and aky ; Let your words be life and power, Let your lips be swift to speak, Let the dumb awake to utterance, Let high courage flush the weak. Pass from hand to hand the message, Pass from lip to lip the word, Till the ailence of the mid night With the prophet tones are stirred, Till the aunshine of the daytime tiear it, greet it evermore ;

Speak ye to the people loudly, Bay ye to them, o'er and o'er, Forward let the people go, O'er the land and through the sea, Neither doubt nor lingering know, Forward, onward, fearlessly."

Speak unto the people, saying -· Ye have now a glorious height, Ye have welcomed death and battle, Rather than desert the right ;-Though your footsteps row are treading On the Red Sea's very edge, Though your feet seem almost sinking, In its troubled crimson sedge, Go ye forward ! and the waters. Making way for liberty, Shall arise in mighty bulwarks, Shielding and defense to be. Botter far than Egypt's quiet, Hetter in this night of strifa For your children to remember,

Through your nation's future life. Forward! onward! many a son, Looking back shall bless the day. When his father followed on. Where God's justice led the way.

Send your steel-clad gunboats southward, With the Mississippi's flow; On Virginia's field of battle, Go to conquer or to die; Over Charleston's blackened towers Lift your blood-washed banner high ; Lift your banner, bear it onward, God bath blessed it and the slave ; Lift it in His name who reigneth, And though oft a broken wave Rolleth back in foam and thunder. From rebeliion's rocks of pride, Smallly and swiftly o'er them Riacth Freedom's holy tide. Forward let your columns move. With the freeman's flag above,

Over freedom's plighted land."

Speak unto the people, saying-By the word of prophecy. Hy the word that faileth never. Go ve forward, in your struggle, For your brother's human right. Forward in your love for others, Ever on from height to height. And as strong ye go and stronger In your holy sacrifice, Shall ye ever grow the greater, In all true prosperities, Till the crowns of peace and plent On your happy land shall rest, And earth's nation's shall acknowledge Lo ! the land that God bath blest Forward! though the sea oppose; Forward! in the holy fight ; Forward ! through the host of foes : Forward! ever for the Right.

THE MISER A miser died - with ill-concealed delight His nearest heir pompously buried him. His spirit glides away to realms of night-To gloomy Oreus and Cocytus grim,

Already is he pushing off from land,

When, bogging passage, comes our shivering

Loud he implores: "Ho! take me over too!" Most gladly, but your fare I first must see The skin-flint shakes his head-"No, not a sous!

He cries, all pale :- "I must go over free." The ferryman laughs—the passenger looks grim With boiling fury : " Ha ! I'll let him know That sooner than be Jewed, I'll plunge and swim To vonder shore, and save my money so." No sooner said than done. The angry waves Heave high above his head, and howl and roar : Stoutly he fights, and lo ! like sullen slaves, They bear him safely to the opposing shore-By this time Charon, too, had reached the land, And just deposited his heavy freight ; A few short hours by, and all now stand At Minos' judgment seat to hear their fate, The miser quakes-for flight 'tis now too late;

They bring before the Judge his high offence, Threatening the revenues of the lower State, And setting up the worst of precedents.

Or would'st thou make his punishment still worse (And, sure, no punishment can match his crime), wholesome warning to all coming time. But Minos from his gloomy eyebrows frowned, And waved his hand and said: "Bnough is heard."

The councillors, close circling, gathered round. And waited, gazing, for the judge's word.

In the year 1746 the same proprietors obtained from the General Assembly authority to set up a Ferry between Newport and James town, on certain conditions and satisfacts. It is so particularly in this connexion to the set of the settlement town, on certain conditions and restrictions, in regard to other grants previously made. They established the Ferry, and continued for some time to do a good business, although there were averal other terry lines at the same time.

In 1769 the proprietors again petitioned the General Assembly, representing that they were under covenant for building out 170 feet more, west, on said wharf, and that they had suffered to the Wharf, showing the faithful observance of the Connexion in this connexion to account for any seeming neglect on my part to explain and more fully represent the doings of the Trustees from time to time. My part of the duty being understood to make the address with the public histery of the Wharf and its connection with the reputation and business interest of the town. I most fully recommend the report here aliuded to as a valuable history in this connexion to discrete the settlement of the country, and on so discrete in our town legislation. It has, of course, like all other important objects, expanded in our prosperity and suffered by our adversity.

From 1726 down to the time of the revolution, we find the same devotion to the cause of learning that they had suffered by the Wharf, showing the faithful observance evidently private schools monopolized a large-
